BC Golf Museum Tour · March 7th, 2024 By "Fairway Jim" Zalusky

ho knew that we should be thanking the Netherlands and India for the game we all love (and at times, hate), Golf?

Our tour of the BC Golf Museum at UBC golf course was a real eye-opener. How often do you get to touch an article from the 1300's? We did. Michael Riste, the museum curator and a golf historian, started the tour with the fascinating game of "Colf or Kolf", first played in what today is the Netherlands on frozen lakes and ponds with a "J" shaped stick that was fashioned into a hollowed-out piece of soft rock. "Colfers" would play the game with a ball that would eventually find its way into a hole cut in the ice. I guess the game was over when the ball fell through the ice.

One of the prized possessions of the BC Golf Museum, bought at an auction, is a rock Hall of Fame from around the 13 1300's, which resembles the face of a modern-day golf iron. Historians believe that trading between the Netherlands and Scotland brought the game of golf to Scotland and to land in the 1400's. Michael also told us the fascinating story of the golf ball. Starting with 'the featherie", which was made using a hat full of goose or chicken feathers that were stuffed into a leather stitched ball, that took the craftsman (many of whom died an early death due to feather ingestion) about 3 hours to complete and was so expensive only the wealthy aristocrats could play. The feathery could fly about 190 yards. Golf really became popular in Scotland with the invention of "the Guttie" ball. An inexpensive ball that was made from gutta-percha, a natural polymer that was used like today's packing peanuts to protect goods in shipment. In the mid 1800's, Scotland did a lot of trading with India and the goods they imported were packed with gutta-percha. Scot's being Scot's, found that when they added water to gutta-percha, they could form the material into a ball, which flew further than the feathery, and was far less expensive (in fact, it was free).

If you love golf or history, make the time to visit the BC Golf Museum. Open Tuesday – Sunday, 12 – 4 pm (closed Mondays) 2525 Blanca St., Vancouver

The BC Golf Museum is housed in the original UBC Golf Course club house and is located on the 8th hole, which used to be the 1st hole and was built in the 1920's. It has hundreds of historic golf clubs including lots of hickory shafted clubs and 100+ year-old putters. Some of the exhibits include trophy rooms, the largest collection of golf books I have ever seen, the BC Golf Hall of Fame and a collection of golf training aids (similar in size to my personal collection at home alongside my defective putter museum).

Michael started his golf adventure as a caddie at Capilano Golf Course and was a recipient of an Evan's Caddie Scholarship, where he attended the University of Washington. He has written "fore" books on golf including, "Just call me Mac " the biography of NW golf course architect, A. Vernon Macan and "Washington Golf: 100 years if growing the game". In 2013, Mike received a Distinguished Service Award from the N. W. Golf Media Association.

as Sandher came very well prepared for his presentation. One of the first things he said was, that his mother told him never to talk about religion and here he was giving a presentation about Religion. I could immediately relate to this statement, because that was something my mother also told me. Religion and politics were not topics to discuss according to our mothers.

I was guite surprised at the presentation being almost sold-out. Certainly, one of the most popular classes we have held, since I have been involved with TALK, in the last 4 years. I mentioned this presentation to my buddies, who did not attend, and they said, "It must be because people are LOOKING for something". Jas certainly enlightened the group on the history of religion and did an excellent job of identifying the differences, but particularly pointing out the similarities.

Jas compared all the major religions in were surprised to hear that all the major religions have much, much more in common than they have differences. Still sad to know that so many wars and killings over the ages have been over religion and our differences rather than celebrating and understanding each other (multi-culturalism).

Jas encouraged all attendees to reach out and understand different religions and cultures and at the very least, enjoy the foods of different religions.

- In summary, Jas encouraged us to:
- a) Have open discussions which will lead to better understanding.
- b) Make an effort to reduce conflicts.
- c) Embrace our differences.

Hopefully we have progressed as a human race where we can learn, listen and talk about each other's faith, even if our mothers told us not to.
